Civic body slow on stray feeding disputes

Dhairyaj Gajara
MUMBAI

Mumbai's housing societies are grappling with conflicts over feeding community animals, as seen in Kalpataru Radiance, where residents clashed over stray dog and cat feeding. The dispute, fuelled by the absence of a designated feeding spot, required BMC intervention to resolve. This issue reflects a broader challenge across the city, where societies struggle to establish feeding zones despite legal mandates, pitting animal welfare enthusiasts against residents concerned about hygiene and safety.

The Animal Birth Control (ABC) Rules, 2023, mandate resident welfare associations (RWAs) and apartment owners associations (AOAs) to designate specific feeding spots and timings. However, implementing this in land-scarce, densely populated Mumbai is challenging, exacerbated by anti-feeding sentiments. "The issue looks small but creates enmity among neighbors, especially if a feeder is not a house owner. Civic bodies must proactively designate feeding zones," said a Kalpataru Radiance resident, requesting anonymity.

SOCIETY STRAY ISSUES

The Bombay High Court has consistently upheld feeders' rights, provided they adhere to rules on timing, location, and hygiene. On August 22, the Supreme Court ordered municipal authorities to create dedicated feeding spaces based on stray populations per ward, with notice boards to clarify permitted areas. Yet, Mumbai and Thane civic bodies have been slow to act, leaving societies in turmoil. In Thane's Lodha Amara township, 22 animal feeders faced opposition from over 600 residents. Tensions escalated, with female feeders alleging harassment, prompting police complaints. The Thane Municipal Corporation approved two additional feeding spots, bringing the total to five. However, residents argue these are insufficient for the 50-acre township. "One spot is near a Jain temple and unus-

Powai hostage case awaits key FSL report

Poonam Apraj
MUMBAI

The Powai kidnapping case involving 17 minors remains under investigation as the Crime Branch awaits a crucial Forensic Science Laboratory (FSL) report. Units 2 and 8 have sent mobile data, audio-video recordings, digital devices, and other seized materials for analysis. To prevent delays, police have followed up with the FSL and filed a petition in court seeking priority examination. Officials say the FSL findings will determine the next legal steps and could significantly influence charges and proceedings in this high-profile case.

Born in jail, trapped by stigma: A fight for dignity and rights

Sunil Ghule's case raises questions about how bureaucratic indifference can scar a life. A clerical error has denied him education & employment

Pranali Lotlikar
MUMBAI

Thirty years after his birth inside the Buldhana district prison, Sunil Ghule's battle for dignity and basic rights is far from over. What began as a fight to correct a single word—"Jail"—on his birth certificate has now turned into a plea for his right to live with dignity, free from social stigma. Despite the Maharashtra State Human Rights Commission (MSHRC) acknowledging the injustice and ordering compensation, Ghule continues to face rejection—not only from authorities this time but also from his own village.

Sunil's story traces back to 1995, when his mother, an undertrial prisoner in an attempted murder case, gave birth to him inside Buldhana District Jail. His father, Nivrutti Ghule, was also lodged in the same prison. "I was born to my mother while she was under trial. My birth took place inside the Buldhana Jail," Ghule says quietly. His mother, accused alongside his father, was eventually acquitted. But the stigma of his birth never left him.

When Ghule obtained his birth certificate years later, it recorded his birthplace as "Buldhana Jail." That single word, he says, destroyed every opportunity that came his way. "It followed me like a curse—in schools, in job interviews, everywhere," he recalls. In 2023, Ghule approached the Maharashtra State Human Rights Commission (MSHRC) seeking correction of his birth records. The ferred. Ghule's moment of justice was short-lived. The State government challenged the Commission's order in the Bombay High Court, arguing that he "was not in need of financial assistance" and had failed to provide documentary proof of mental and financial suffering.

The legal battle, Ghule says, has left him exhausted and hopeless. "I have lost faith in the system. The same State that wronged me for three decades now says I don't deserve justice," he laments. "I will argue my own case before the High Court. I don't trust anyone anymore." Even after his birthplace was corrected, Ghule says he continues to live as a social outcast. In his village of Nandura, Buldhana district, residents refuse to let him build a house or work.

"The entire village has condemned me," he says. "I don't get any job. They say I am born in jail, so I must be a criminal too. Even marriage proposals disappear once people know my background."

"I just want my fundamental right—the right to live," he says. "I want the government to rehabilitate me in another village, somewhere I can live like a normal human being, without my past haunting my future." Ghule's case raises uncomfortable questions about how deeply bureaucratic indifference can scar a life. A clerical error, perpetuated for decades, has denied him education, employment, and dignity—rights guaranteed by the Constitution itself.

While the MSHRC tried to heal that wound with words of empathy and legal redress, the State's challenge has reopened it—leaving Sunil in yet another limbo. "I was born in jail," he says, "but it feels like I have never been freed."
